SynapseLingo welcome

Hey du – yes, you! This episode is brought to you by SynapseLingo. For more goodies, visit www.synapse-lingo.com. Ready to have some fun with “have”?

Today, you’ll nail the English to Talinga-Bwisi forms of “have” so you can speak with confidence – shopping, travel, study, all covered. Let's roll!

Your learning goal today

By the end, you'll confidently say every form of "have" and use it in quick dialogues. Stay playful, stay curious!

- Goal checklist:
- - Understand that base "have" = na.
- - Say: I have, you have, he has, she has, it has, we have, you have (plural), they have.
- - Use them in short, real conversations.

Form roll-call with rhythm

Clap your hands or tap your desk – let's groove the forms into your memory.

- have → na
- I have → nina
- you have (singular) → olina
- he has → alina
- she has → alina
- it has → alina
- we have → turi na
- you have (plural) → murina
- they have → balina
- Bonus groove: have it? Say na! Ta-da – now ya na!

Market mini-dialogue: comedy cut

Time for a quick skit – listen, smile, and shadow the lines out loud.

- A: Do you have a book?
- B: Yes, I have a book – Ndi na kitabo.
- A: Great. Do you have a pen?
- B: Yep – Ye, ndi na kalamu.
- A: Awesome. We have snacks, right?
- C: We have – turi na!
- A: And they have water?
- D: They have – balina amaizi.
- Narrator: The backpack is so full it groans, “I have... too much!” The crowd chants: na, na, na!

Drill time: quick swaps

Say the English prompt, then the Talinga-Bwisi answer. Ready? Go!

- I have → nina
- You have (singular) → olina
- He has → alina
- She has → alina
- It has a tail → alina omukira

- We have → turi na
- You have (plural) tickets → murina amatikiti
- They have time → balina obwire
- Bonus: I have water → Ndi na amaizi
- You have time → Oli na obwire

Culture tip: how “have” works

Tiny word, big power: in Talinga-Bwisi, “have” blends forms with rhythm.

Think of na as a glue for possession (“with”). For singular subjects, you often hear -lina forms like nina, oлина, alina; for “we,” you’ll hear a handy phrase turi na (‘we are with’). In fast talk, market banter, and friendly chats, these pop up everywhere – checklists, plans, gear checks – boom: nina, oлина, alina, turi na, murina, balina.

Lightning quiz

Answer fast – say it out loud!

- Q1: “have” in Talinga-Bwisi? → na
- Q2: “I have”? → nina
- Q3: “you have” (singular)? → oлина
- Q4: “we have”? → turi na
- Q5: “you have” (plural)? → murina
- Q6: “they have”? → balina
- Q7: “he has” / “she has” / “it has”? → alina

Challenge: say it in life

Your turn – fill in the blank with the right form.

- 1) You check your pockets: “I have my phone” → nina ssimu.
- 2) Ask a friend: “Do you have water?” → Olina amaizi?
- 3) Confirm the team: “We have the map” → turi na ekirabo ky’enzira.
- 4) Point to a box: “It has two parts” → alina ebitundu bibiri.
- 5) At the gate: “You (plural) have the tickets!” → mu-rina amatikiti!
- 6) Relief moment: “They have time” → balina obwire.
- Now recap the English forms out loud: have, I have, you have, he has, she has, it has, we have, you have (plural), they have. Nailed it!
